MEMBERSHIPS - ATTENTION ALL MEMBERS, NEW AND OLD

Memberships for 1989/90 are now payable, in fact by the time you get this notice they will be due as well.

You will find a Membership Application form with this Newsletter, and you will note that the Membership fees have been increased - NOT BY MUCH.

Some of you, particularly the new members will have already paid up to June 30th, 1990, and your receipts and/or Membership cards will show that, so please do not be offended by receiving a reminder. The new forms were not printed as early as they should have been, due to circumstances beyond my control and so have to be done along with the Newsletter and time precludes sorting through the labels to separate the names of paid-up members.

Editorial

Hello Readers,

Welcome to the July edition of FOLK VINE - and a crowded one it is too! I must thank all contributors for their enthusiasm - and punctuality! It hurt, but I had to hold back some stuff until August. I won't say what: you'll have to renew your membership to find out. (Hint! Hint!) Unfortunately, the A.F.T. newsletter again failed to materialise, so there's no news from there. (Sorry.)

This month's tune and dance are American ones that Bruce and I came across when we were living in New Jersey. (July 4 is upon us.) Come along to the Colonial Dancers July 5 'Up to Scratch' dance and try them out.

Continuing a series on instruments and performance, Ross Ryan writes about the Solo Acoustic Performer in the 1990s. If anyone has expertise in a particular field - bagpipes, yodelling, sousaphone, alpenhorn - whatever - your contribution would be most welcome.

We have a wealth of letters this month, some quite controversial. All letters are welcome, but please keep them short so that there is room for everyone.

I'd like to thank Bruce for the sterling work that he has been doing in soliciting articles. (As anyone who saw his attire at the recent V.F.M.C. ball is aware, he has quite an aptitude for SOLICITING!) Thanks also to Dormouse the Cat for her invaluable assistance.

Happy Reading,

Jill

Kynan Simpson 21-12-88 - 20-5-89

Friends of Ray and Jennie Simpson were saddened by the death of their son Kynan (aged 5 months) in May.

Kynan was a happy and delightful baby, whose short life was surrounded by music and dancing - indeed, Jennie danced in the Edinburgh Tattoo whilst pregnant with him. Ray and Jennie's love of music led to some very special music being played by close friends at Kynan's Requiem Mass.

The moving funeral service at the church and the cemetery was a fitting farewell to a much loved child.

FANTASY AND FAERIE

AN UNUSUAL FOLK/ART HAPPENING

Those of you who missed the "Faery & Fantasy" Art Exhibition at the Ufitzi Gallery recently, along with some fantastic (in the true sense of the word) ceramic sculpture, and some lovely Folk concerts REALLY MISSED SOMETHING!!!

Mary Fairburn (Flegg) was exhibiting a number of her paintings and illustrations in the style of fantasy and faery - just like it said in the advertising. They were beautiful and of a wide range within the F. & F. category. Unfortunately, I couldn't buy the two I particularly liked, even if I had had a suitable place to display them.

Mary thought it would be an idea to have several small concerts, presenting F. & F. themes. I think the lady is a genius - it was a brilliant idea.

I missed the first one, because I didn't hear of it in time; the second was Danny Spooner and Bruce and Jill Watson - we all know Danny's repertoire of F. & F. and Bruce and Jill had a few too; the third one was "Twanky-dillo" - it may not have been all strictly F. & F. but it was great fun and very enjoyable; the fourth was "Cantabile" and I missed that one too (I'm still wishing for instant cloning at times like that) because I couldn't miss the V.F.M.C. Ball; and the fifth one was Maureen Beggs, Marg. Somerville and Duncan Dunnadge. This threesome was joined by Mary herself in the course of the evening. Mary put on some luscious suppers during the series of concerts so she was a very busy lady right through the series. The final concert drew a bumper crowd - I think the first one was not well-attended but the audience built up over the series. For me the real plus for all the concerts was the absence of intrusive sound gear, mixing desks and microphones obscuring or at least intervening between singer and audience. They were all great and very enjoyable and a very big thank-you to Mary and the stalwart Patrick.

The V.F.M.C. Ball was great too - 30th Anniversary for the Club, and a couple of specials on the programme. Firstly, the Colonial Dancers showed us the display they did in Edinburgh - I saw it from the balcony and it looked beautiful. Ray and Jenny Simpson took part in the display, very bravely I thought in the circumstances of their great loss and grief. The other "special" was the Fitzroys Quadrille fancy dress and competition. Some of the costumes were hilarious although one or two were a bit hard to fathom what they represented.

T.S.D.A.V. Pandoit Weekend 19-20 MAY 1989

As recorded and enjoyed by MARGOT F. HITCHCOCK

This was a well organised weekend by LORRAINE OGILVIE, where those who participated enjoyed a weekend of dancing, socialising, and absorbing the unusual history of the area.

The dancing started on Friday night with an Old Time Dance in the local Yandoit Hall, with a crowded dance floor. The music was provided by HARRY MCQUEEN, JACK HEAGNEY and friends, and it was a great pleasure to listen to these oldtime music tunes played by such great musicians. A lot of local people and families showed how they remembered to do these ohce very popular dances. The ladies coped very well with the fast floor with their still popular silver dance shoes. The dancing finished with an enjoyable country supper.

Saturday morning started with an Irish Dance Workshop with teacher, WENDY SCOTT from Melbourne, which was enjoyed by all, mostly Melbourne people and members of the T.S.D.A.V. and friends.

A lunch break included a picnic in the sun outside in the grounds of the hall. This was followed by an Italian Dance Workshop, with capable teacher, ARTHUR TURNBALL, introduced by his friend SHIRLEY ANDREWS. This was a particularly interesting workshop as the area was first settled by Italian migrants in the last century.

Then on to the Australian Dance Workshop with SHIRLEY ANDREWS, where we learnt Garibaldi's March/Waltz and some Quadrilles which Shirley taught at the National Festival in Queensland this year.

Saturday night was started off with a counter tea at John's Hotel in Hepburn where our musicians played while waiting for their tea, much to the pleasure of others in the hotel. A great meal with a variety of roast dinners, soup, and sweets for $10.00. Lorraine enjoyed the port at $1.00 a glass as did Peter Ellis.

Then back to the hall for the CELLIDH which didn't start until we got there... Harry McQueen showed us what a great accordion player he is despite being in his late 70s. Along with Jack Heagney, and some other great local musicians, lots more dancing and other very good items it was a great night.

Some camped outside in the grounds for the night, but only the young and the tough could take the freezing cold with ice all over our cars when we left the hall... Others travelled to more comfort and warmth in the surrounding area.

Sunday morning I did not make it back in time, having slept in after all the previous dancing and enjoyment, however I was told the locals gave some interesting accounts of the history of the area, and in particular the Italians who originated there in the gold rush era. With thanks to the lady whose maiden name was Carlene Sartori for her interesting stories of the area. A few even got to see the remains of the old stone houses which still stand.

Thanks to Lorraine for all her work and Betty Davis who both helped to make it an enjoyable weekend for all who attended.

The Solo Acoustic Performer in the 1990s

ROSS RYAN

This article is taken from the text of a workshop given by Ross Ryan at this year's Port Fairy Folk Festival.

The relevance of the solo performer in the 1990's? Now what kind of dumb topic is that? Sure it was my idea, but c'mon, it was several months before the festival when I was approached to conduct a workshop at Port Fairy, and they caught me on a bad day. If they'd rung a week later I probably would have suggested 'Chords You Can Play With One Finger' or something more within my field of experience.

Why is the topic dumb? Well when it comes right down to it, 'relevance' is really just a matter of opinion. I'm not, for example, a big fan of Barry Manilow, but I'm sure he's important to SOMEBODY. Surely that makes him relevant? Besides, no matter what you do for a living, if you're staring at your navel and contemplating your nett worth as a human being in terms of whether you are relevant or not, you possibly have problems which this article has no intention of addressing. But I digress.

Solo performers are like cartoonists. They present ideas in a raw undressed form. Not completed paintings but sketches where the emphasis is on the material and the soloist. The approach is direct, face to face, variable, self-contained and most importantly, believable - the human touch.

In the early '70s solo acts were rather fashionable - Cat Stevens, Don Mclean and so on. At the time I was living in Perth performing 'Moonshadow' in wine bars. I was also going through the angst of a disastrous relationship and this was turning me into a songwriter. Nothing better than the melodrams of unrequited love to help expand your repertoire.

Then my big show-biz break came. The recently late Roy Orbison was touring Australia and arrived in Perth without a support act. Somebody who owed someone a favour who bribed someone who had vaguely heard of me, recommended that I do that night's show. I was perfect. I was available and cheap.

Within the context of our discussion, it's revealing to note that the promoters wanted me to perform with a band. Subsequently, I spent most of that day rehearsing with several of Perth's top musos. After about 5 hours of this I knew it wasn't going to work and decided to perform solo. I was told I was out of my mind but for some reason I kept listening to my stomach (always listen to your stomach) - and my stomach told me to go it alone. So against the wishes and advice of almost everyone else involved, I went it alone...and lucked out. I couldn't believe it. The crowd loved me!!!

After the show I was invited by the promoters to do the rest of the Australian tour. On a Thursday night in Perth I was in a wine bar competing with about 30 drunks. By Saturday I was in Melbourne playing to 5,000 people and you could hear a pin drop. Talk about being thrown into the deep end.

But why did it work? Mainly it seems, because I was quite up front about how I was feeling. I told them about my day, about the rehearsals, the problems. I also told them I was TERRIFIED. They liked that. They laughed and clapped and cheered. I was describing exactly how they imagined they'd be feeling if the Show-Biz Fairy had plucked them, instead of me, from the audience. Suddenly we were all in this together. And once that bond had been established it was all a piece of cake. They believed me! It didn't matter whether I was brilliant or not - that became (dare I say?) irrelevant.

Solo acts certainly have their limitations but they have one important edge - and that is their ability to communicate with an audience on a one to one basis. Alone and in a sense vulnerable, it is easier to feel you know this person - you are not merely being entertained, you are sharing the experience. This isn't saying that if given the chance, circumstances and resources, most soloists wouldn't like to work with a band or combo of some kind. To have that input from other people. To flesh out your material. To add those sounds and harmonies that you can always hear in your head when you first play or write a song. But bands and other people generally, present their own problems.

As a rule, solo acts don't join bands - democracies where everyone takes the same chances. Solo acts FORM dictatorial backing bands and then PAY WAGES and take on all responsibility for the music, direction, bookings, equipment, crews etc. etc. One minute you're a simple solo act, the next you're a corporation.

ART FOR ART'S SAKE

Solo acts are used to, and in fact prefer, making all the artistic decisions. They have very little experience with compromise and as a result aren't very good at it. They are used to total control, where their own unadulterated and unchallenged ideas are seen through to logical (or otherwise) conclusions and this is difficult with a room full of conflicting ideas and egos. God so loved the world that he didn't send a committee.

Notwithstanding some recent popular acts that could be considered solo - Tracey Chapman, Susan Vega and so on - not to mention the success of events such as the Port Fairy folk festival - acoustic music as we know it is not exactly 'today's' music. One only has to look at the charts and at the kind of gigs and venues available to realize this. One can assume that we believe in what we're doing because the chances are we won't get rich doing it. There's also an incredible personal payoff when it works and it only takes one great gig out of ten to feed the habit.

Ok, so our motives seem to be in order, probably somewhat inflated, but on an 'I've got to be me' level, definitely honorable. But is there a niche in the market place (which of course translated means 'can one make a quid?') for us at this point of time?

Tricky.

MONEY FOR GOD'S SAKE

Because of our stripped down solo format, we have to be listened to. We don't make very effective background music and we're pretty much impossible to dance to. We aren't what the punters are flocking to see and listen to at the moment. Maybe it's because of the times, but we generally aren't escapist enough - and escapism seems to be the vogue.

C'est la vie - but that doesn't help us pay our bills.

One of my failings, if you like, is that I've always had a problem with the music industry. I hate it. I've seen most sides of it from both a position of power and as an outsider - and it's the pits. Most industry people that I've met don't particularly like music. They get off on the alleged glamour of the business. You ask them what their favourite song is and they have to check out the top 40 to see what's number one.

So to survive, we have to create our own circuits. Our own venues. Invent our own agents, managers and record outlets. We have to exist outside the system which of course is not easy. It's hard enough to write, learn material and perform, without having to be hassled by the everyday business side of it all. Generally in this country, you've got to sell yourself - which is of course a drag - especially as performers are pretty much filled with self-doubt anyway.

In my case I'm so hopeless dealing with getting gigs for example, that by the end of the conversation I've either agreed to do the job for nothing or I've suggested someone else.

Maybe what we need is a Solo Performers' Conference. Where we all pool our contacts and experiences and then hire a front person to look after our interests. There's not THAT many of us and besides it's not as if we have enormous logistic problems involving huge crews, laser shows and such. The work is out there, but I would guarantee that the list of venues that I regularly play is quite different than say Doug Ashdown's or Margaret Roadnight's. It appears that our status as soloists certainly extends beyond the stage.

I've always been a great believer in the analogy of the performer as a hotel. A hotel usually employs someone to run the business. If that person isn't delivering the goods then they are sacked and replaced. I've never subscribed to or even really understood the tradition where artists are beholden to 'godlike' all-powerful managers from the 'Stick With Me Kid I'll Make You A Star' school of business. Instead WE should be saying 'Do your job properly and you'll get paid.'

If we were organised we could solve a great number of our problems. For example, we would be able to record more frequently and our product could be marketed and distributed efficiently and effectively. If any number of teenage garage bands are catered for by independent labels then surely those of us who have had infinitely more experience as performers should be able to make ourselves heard outside of the mainstream market. No one owes us a living and if we're drifting into oblivion we have only ourselves to blame.

Under this heading of money, business and survival it may be worthwhile mentioning our relationship with our audiences. Where do we draw the line between being serious, concerned performers with our integrities intact and our role as entertainers?

After all we are essentially being paid to put on a show and not to change the world. Lets face it - as wonderful as we are, we're only singers. It's not as if we're learned experts in world affairs. Sure we have our opinions but they're not any more informed or special than anyone else's in the audience. I for one can't perform brain surgery or run the government. I have enough trouble just remembering the words.

If people want their lives changed they'll find themselves a guru or start reading Hermann Hess. When they want to relax they go to a movie or restaurant or to see a performer of some kind. This doesn't mean we have to become totally transparent. The soloist has a distinguished history in the area of social comment and such and that should never be denied; but our task is to be able to challenge an audience without them feeling threatened or guilty. Comedy is a terrific outlet for this approach. There's nothing better than an audience rolling in the aisles whilst at the same time they're saying to themselves, 'Hey, wait a minute, why am I laughing? This is serious!'

In next month's Folkvine, Ross Ryan goes on to talk of the future, and what it holds for the solo acoustic performer, with interesting insights into the role that technology will inevitably play.

THANKS!

I would like to express my sincere thanks to all of my folk friends for your kind thoughts and wonderful support following the recent death of my father. My family and I have been greatly strengthened by such expressions of sympathy and care.

BELL'S ANGELS

STEVE SCHNUR, June 1982

This Contradance was written by New Jersey dance caller, Steve Schnur in honour of expatriate Australian fiddler, Michael Bell. He gave it an 'Australian' flavour with the unusual 'boomerang' figure in the B part. Reels, such as 'Bobcat Shuffle' lend themselves well to the dance.

FORMATION: Duple minor, improper. MUSIC: 32 bar reels.

- A1 Allemand left one and a half with the one below, ladies half allemand right, and with partner full allemand left. (This looks a bit like a ladies chain.)
- A2 Hey for 4, (reel of 4), ladies start, passing right shoulder.)
- B1 Ladies half allemand R. together, then full allemand L. with opposite. (4 bars)
BOOMERANG (4 bars) (Ladies pass by R. shoulder, go full round partner, clockwise, and back to 'thrower' (the other man), as the men move in momentarily to facilitate. Don't rush the boomerang. There is plenty of time, especially if the 'throwers' give their women a bit of momentum out of the allemand L.)
- B2 Ladies with 'throwers', balance and swing. (Lady ends swing on the man's right. This is the progression.)

 The BOOMERANG is simply a variation of the ladies chain, done with straight arms. If you have queries about the dance, contact Jill Watson c/o Folkvive.

Stillness on the hillside
Alabaster sky
Gentle breezes stirring leaves
Falcon soars on high

Call of wild country
Place of wilderness
Hear the peace and solitude
Feel the mute protest

Greens and browns and shadows
Pristine, beautiful
Eucalyptus sentinel
Tall and strong and cool

CHORUS
And it's alright

Special in the morning
Softly sigh in awe
Forest lights in sunny rays
A thousand colours and more

Far away from nowhere
Beyond the old black stump
It's alright to mine and log
And woodchip, dam and dump
Oh it's alright.

There are many students in the music department at La Trobe University who must record a certain number of live concerts for their folio. They use a good quality Neumann stereo microphone into a digital P.C.M. recorder and can copy the result onto your cassette or beta tape.

If you want yourself or your group recorded then write out a postcard size ad. for me to display on the student notice board. Interested students will contact you directly.

As part of a day of dance workshops and an evening social dance, T.S.D.A.V. will launch a book of Australian folk dances on Saturday 15 July. The book is "COMTEMPORARY AUSTRALIAN FOLK DANCES - Vol 1" subtitled "Dances from the T.S.D.A.V. dance Composers Competition 1980 - 1986".

The dance book contains 17 dances that were entered in the T.S.D.A.V. Dance Composers Competition between 1980 and 1986. Dances include entries from South Australia, New South Wales and Queensland.

The day will include 2 dance workshops of dances from the book. In most cases these will be presented by the composers. There will be a social dance in the evening that will include other dances from the book and a selection of popular social dances.

The program for the day is as follows:

CARLTON COMMUNITY CENTRE

150 PRINCES ST, CARLTON

1.00 pm. SOCIAL GATHERING BEFOREHAND
Meet with everyone else and informal socialising at the start of the afternoon, with light refreshments.

1.30 pm. SIX OF THE BEST
A selection of 6 of the dances from the book. These will be presented by the composers of the dances. It will include a variety of couples, longways set and square set dances from Australian, Scottish and Irish backgrounds.

3.00 pm. REFRESHMENTS, BOOK LAUNCH and A.G.M.
The book will be formally launched over refreshments.

Also there will be a (brief) A.G.M. of the Traditional Dance Association of Victoria. Your ideas are most welcome. Also anyone wishing to be on the Committee is most welcome.

4.00 pm. TARRADALE CLUB QUADRILLES.
Peter Hunter and Pam Pittaway from South Australia will be our special guests from South Australia for this workshop. These dances, composed by Wally & Phillis Tugwell, were prepared for the dance competition by Peter Hunter. These dances were competition winners in 1981 and 1982.

Calling all Night Owls!

So! You think we enjoy being minor media celebrities. You bet your arse we do! And so could you with a stint at the 3CR folk program. Enjoy the feeling of power when you play something that is only of interest to someone in Normandy. Take the mickey out of committee members of the F.S.D.S.V. Play tracks with electric guitar on them. Play Leonard Cohen records. The list is endless.

We want you to join the team, not only because it means we don't have to stay up late so often, but because it widens everyone's exposure to different music. Also as there are very few women involved in the program at present. Help keep us all out of the Equal Opportunity Tribunal by you getting involved.

Why don't you sit in on a program or two to see what is involved before committing yourself? I'm sure most current presenters would not mind.

Incidentally, did you know that you could record the whole two hours of the folk program without turning the tape over, and using a timer?

Most VCR's have an audio dub facility so, as long as you have at least two hours of continuous video on the tape when you start, you can replace the audio with your own. Simply plug the line out of your AM/FM tuner into the line in of your VCR, switch over from TV to Line, press Play and Audio Dub and set the timer in the normal way. This may not work on all sets but it certainly works on mine.

TONY FALLA

Morning Star's "Folkie Fortunes"

Cancer
June 21 to July 22

The world has spun another 30 degrees and Cancerians are hugging their pot-bellied stoves (or their pot-bellied lovers).

Folk is a natural arena for the Cancerian who wants so much to get in touch with his or her roots. It is such a wonderful opportunity to indulge in archaeological detail in between long, ancient ballads. (Whatever happened to that appalling 'Tu-Ning' joke? Don't you miss it?) It will take a little scrutiny to tell if that Cancerian brooding in the corner is mulling over someone's sarcastic comment about this little foible, or is merely about to launch into all 27 verses of 'Sir Patrick Spens' (thereby inviting someone's sarcastic comment) or is just plain inebriated. Drunk or sober, they won't budge from that cosy corner. Nor will they let go that infernal squeeze-box.

On the subject of sarcastic remarks - don't pan their performances. Not only are they a bit on the touchy side, but they remember! A watertight pen-name helps.

The retentiveness of Cancer applies to all spheres of life - memories, possessions, children, spouses, money (and always return that record or book you borrowed). The Cancerian is the one with all those piles of tattered old sheet music and unplayable instruments. No, they aren't about to be thrown out or sold. Nor will you be able to coax them out of one single treasured dust mote. They probably have fabulous record collections.

This is a water sign. But don't let that fool you. Many Cancerians detest water in all its applications and can be seen imbibing anything but that cursed liquid in largish quantities. The more infantile may go for a Brown Cow or even a Big M. Throw a beer at them and it will bounce off the crab's hard shell. Throw a bottle of whiskey and they'll probably drink it before it hits the ground - and then get maudlin. It is at closing time that you will get your best opportunity to observe the characteristic side-winding gait of this species.

Emotional as Cancer is, the painful sensitivity is protected like a soft body in a hard outer shell. At a social gathering, you are much more likely to pick a Cancerian by their laugh than their tears. This starts with a demented cackle that builds up to a hooting crescendo and subsides into helpless, quivering sobs. Musically, if your session starts with witty ditties and slowly degenerates through terrible country and western songs about Mother right down to 'The Little Boy that Santa Claus Forgot', look for a strong Cancerian bias in the gathering. Look also for clowns and mimics.

One thing that Cancer won't do for long is live in a shared house or flat, unless he or she owns it. Security is a big thing. They also go in for investments. The pantry bulges in readiness for the holocaust or the mouse plague.

Don't expect Cancerians to let you know what they are really after. You'll have no idea till they have the desired object in their claws - even if you were it. They will first see their quarry from the doors of their burrows, and scuttle inside again without displaying any sign of interest. Tomorrow they will come out again, approach from another direction, look at it from another angle and go back. Next time they will try another tack. After all angles are exhausted, they will creep up sideways, grab, and run back to the burrow with a firm grip on the prize.

They are likely to bring teddy bears to festivals, as well as enough food to feed the whole crowd. Check out the Cancerian tent while you're there. It will probably have some 'tunnel' leading in to it. Privacy is very important.

Cancer rules the breasts. Breasts will be exaggerated either in their bodies or in their minds.

The stomach is also an important part of the anatomy. Which is why depressed Cancerians are compulsive eaters and happy Cancerians are always feeding you. Now this is a trait I wouldn't like to discourage, and have no intention of criticising. But have you noticed how often it's something that has to be eaten with a spoon? Have you begun to entertain an uneasy suspicion that you were being prepared for pate de foie gras?

The ruling luminary for Cancer is the Moon and the metal is silver.

Morning Star

Dearest Nancy

After the heady emotionalism of last month's communication from Nancy's estranged spouse/partner/constant companion/significant other (we aim to suit all tastes and ideologies here), the daggy Dave, she has recovered her equanimity, and, pausing only to whip Dave's moleskins out of the dryer, she returns to the more mundane task of answering readers' questions and keeping wayward folkies on the rails.

Dearest Nancy,

When I am playing my guitar the strings keep getting caught in my shirt buttons. What am I doing wrong?

E. Clapton, Drung South.

Dear E. Clapton,

Try turning the guitar around so that the strings face the audience. I believe this is the customary way of playing stringed instruments, although one noted Irish musician has been known to fiddle with his navel.

Dearest Nancy,

I want to become a shantyman. In order to sing properly, which thumb should I hook into my belt?

Foster S. Guinness, Bundaberg

Dear Foster,

Preferably not the same one that you use to hold your beer. Should you also wish to cup one hand over your ear, the above advice also applies, even if this results in your trousers falling down.

Dearest Nancy,

If I want to be a true folkie, do I have to pursue a career in computers?

A. Macintosh, North Fitzroy

Dear M(s) Macintosh,

Only if you want to communicate with others. The folkie abhorrence of electrical equipment does not include the word processor. The humble, organically grown pencil has, I'm afraid, had its day.

I like to imagine that the folk scene is actually a refuge-an asylum - where computer-heads come to restore their humanity after a hard day at the keyboard.

Having in younger and sillier days found myself the only non-mathematician in a Morris side, I am convinced that there is a high incidence of technology-induced lunacy in the folk scene. After a hard day's capering try sitting in a pub full of Morris dancers telling mathematics jokes. An ugly concept indeed!

Perhaps I just have a chip on my shoulder (silicon, of course!)

$1000 to lay wild puma rumor to rest

By GERARD RYLE

Those who believe in the Maryborough puma rumors are to be put to the test.

The organisers of the Maryborough Golden Wattle Festival are offering $1000 to anyone who can bring them a wild puma. But the animal must be captured alive — and a veterinary surgeon will be on hand to make sure it has not been kidnapped from a zoo.

Some locals, after numerous sightings of pumas or other cat-like predators, believe they have colonised the forests near Maryborough.

The secretary of the festival committee, Ms Margaret Harrison, said that by offering the prize it was hoped "to find out once and for all if they do really exist".

The hunt is the highlight of the festival, which runs from 22 September to 8 October. Entry forms to catch a live puma are not available until the opening day of the festival. To win, the catch must be presented alive on the final day.

If caught, the animal would be displayed for a few weeks in Maryborough, Ms Harrison said.

ed from these progenitors. However, plausible as this theory may appear at first view, my own investigations reveal that reports were common enough prior to the second World War to make this unlikely. The explanation offered before the present one is that the animal had 'escaped from a circus' or 'zoo'. Such a story must have been current in England at one time. In his poem Elegy for Mr Goodbeare (Collected Poems, Duckworth, London), Sir Osbert Sitwell wrote:

'...Mr Goodbeare could remember when the escaped and hungering tiger
flickered lithe and fierce through Foxton Wood,

Tales of Big Cats in the bush are in the news again, with a $1,000 prize for anyone who can catch one. BILL SCOTT suspects that folklore has a substantial part to play in the phenomenon. The following piece, abridged from his article, 'BIG, BLACK AND BEAUTIFUL' in the June, 1989 edition of QUEENSLAND FOLK, tells of the long history and wide distribution of such stories. The original article included 10 eyewitness descriptions, but lack of space prevents them from being included here.

The naturalist Ellis Troughton in his book Furred Animals of Australia (Angus & Robertson, Sydney) has this to say:

'...although such an animal has been reported on several occasions no specimen has ever reached any museum to verify the appearance scientifically. There are often simple explanations for such reports, but the consistency of the accounts suggests the possibility of the presence of some large carnivorous marsupial of the Dasyurid family, (which includes the Thylacine)...'

There is certainly a very strong folk belief in this country of the existence of such an animal, which is usually described by witnesses as 'a panther' or 'a big cat'. The usual explanation offered by informants as to the presence in Australia of such a creature is the widely held belief that members of an American fighter-plane squadron based in western Victoria smuggled two baby panthers into the country as mascots for their fliers. At cessation of hostilities this pair was supposed to have been released in bushland and the present population is supposed to have descended

camoring hounds
and hunted it then and there as a gentleman should...'

Below is a selection of reports of this belief, first from eyewitnesses and second from newspaper reports of this phenomenon in eastern Australia...they cover a wide geographic area. (ranging from Victoria to Queensland. We include one from near Guyra, in the New England district, from the 1930s)

4. 'I'm looking down from the old gate and there was a beast about so high. (gesturing) It was no dog, it was a cat. It was sort of motley brown, dark brown and light brown. It had a round face with white on the front and sides and two ears pricked up and a very long tail. I tell you I could feel shivers down my back. I had no rifle, I had nothing. Anyhow, it just turned round and went away down the brush. I don't know if it was a tiger or a leopard or what it might have been but there was this bloody great thing and, honest to God, I'd seen staghounds and greyhounds and this was as big as any of those. About two foot high at the shoulder but more gut than a greyhound dog, a more flappy gut. And a great big tail, I mean, a dog's tail would come down to the hock but this was a lot longer. But it had a round face, not a pointed muzzle kind of face. They reckoned it was all bullshit but I was there. No one likes to be laughed at, that's why I shut up about it...'

It is not the province of a folklorist to enter any argument as to the reality or otherwise of such tales: but my continuing investigation into the belief has on occasion caused me to wonder.

There is some evidence that the story has been extant for at least 80 years. A very elderly informant at Goulburn in central New South Wales told me of an occasion in his boyhood when all schoolchildren were kept at home rather than face the lonely walk to school during the depredations of what was then called 'the Marulan Tiger'. This mythical beast, like the tiger in the Sitwell poem from England, was supposed to have escaped from a circus.

Perhaps the countryman's attitude is best summed up in a letter to the editor of my local newspaper following (one report) In part it reads as follows:

'Country life for many is slow. It breeds a certain oneness with the seasons that enters the heart. The oneness allows a decade to seem like a week - a short one.

Country life and field work produces a need. A need for certain things to be in a certain way.

Facts become myths. They shift around. You look at something. What does it mean?

The oneness with the seasons is still the same. City fellas run a hectic race. They've got to know everything. They ruin the land when they find out certain things. The mountain cats are still there, I hope. Ain't seen one for a while. 'so is that great gold seam that so many died to hide in the late 1920s. No survivors left to tell the tale. Cut each other's throats. The last man dying before he could tell the location. So why tell anything unless it suits?' Daily News, Warwick, 30/12/1988

The above echoes my own sentiments in the matter. Who cares about the facts. Long may the panthers roam the mountains! Meantime, has anyone else out there got panthers?

RECORD REVIEW

THE YEAR OF GOD'S FAVOUR? - PETER KEARNEY

Reviewed by Enda Kenny

My first encounter with the singing of Peter Kearney was about a month ago on 3CR's folk 'drivetime' program as I departed the Melbourne folk club at around 1 am. Whilst musing as to why radio presenters when given a new album by a songwriter will then go and play the only 'cover' track from it, I tuned in and enjoyed his version of 'No More Boomerang'.

Listening from the comfort of my armchair the album got through to me after a couple of spins and overall I think it's tidy if a little unspectacular. Production couldn't be faulted - this is Peter's sixth album and he seems to have got the right mix with no overbearing instruments and good crisp vocals, especially from Helen Archer.

As for the songs, well, some of his observations are sharp - they might make you look at the land you live in more closely but I feel that they lose something in the vinyl. The subject matter is often potent but the delivery seems too 'nice' if you know what I mean. I liked the opening tracks on both sides: 'Rock of Ages/Uluru' and Peter's musical arrangement of Lawson's 'Bill' (the kind of character hero who'd leave Gunga Din for dead!)

'The Deaths Go On' (winner of last year's Declan Affley award) is a fine song and the black and white undertones are strong throughout the album. There are a lot of songs that might grab your attention if you could see the face of the singer - I think I'll wait and see him 'live' before investing in my first alternative souvenir of 1988.

LETTERS!

NOW I'M ROPEABLE

Richard Keam

I had a strange dream last night, aided no doubt by the Drambuie but possibly not unconnected with something I'd read. I'm coming out of this country roadhouse and here in front of me is this bloody big Mack truck. I know 'this because it has McTruck across the grille and this Scottish bloke leaps out - I know he's a Scot because he's wearing the kilt and sporran - and he is kicking at one of the front tyres. I see from the driver's door that the truck is Matilda and the bloke nimsel looks familiar. He sees me watching and turns around and now I know him, it's that truckin' songs guy! Man what a buzz! And he gives the tyre another kick and he says "ah like tae hae Goodyear between maself and the rooad."

Well, you'd have to sympathise, wouldn't you? I mean, what a stupid, ill-informed, narrow-minded, misleading, petty, below the belt attack on a fine and uncompromising artist. And the pity of it is that unless someone challenges such nonsense, people who are not in a position to find out the facts are actually going to believe it.

I'm referring of course to Peter Goodyear's 'clever' parody of Eric Bogle's "Now I'm Easy" (April Folkvine), which is clever in the same low degree as the fox slinking off after attacking the best pedigreed rooster. Not about Eric? No, of course not Peter. Let's just assume for the sake of argument that it is.

The fact is that Eric has never once compromised his music or his values and is still singing the same songs in the same style as always. The heinous crime appears to be that he has reached out with his songs to new audiences and thus added a whole new constituency to his, and I would have thought our, kind of music.

Who and what constitutes the "slow drift from the folk idiom to the country and western scene" which is "where the money is"? What drift? What "western"? What "scene"? (Wonderful that folk isn't a 'scene'. So much more legitimacy. Well of course it is an art form, isn't it, not like that other shit.) What 'money'?

Like the snake, which in country folklore never dies until sundown, some people's stereotypes die very hard indeed. All you can do, I suppose, is keep repeating the facts. The fact is that the only 'drift' that has happened, in the present exciting time of musical barriers coming down, is that country music - which is, like folk, far more of a circuit than a style - has become diversified to the point that folk performers are being accepted by country audiences without having to change their material or presentation. The stylistic 'western' sub-genre does have a following but in relative terms it is small. Ironically it seems to be about the only form of country music performed in the cities. Perhaps it is that, lacking any substantive experience of country life and country issues, the younger urban audiences can only relate to (or react to) the ersatz Country of western gear and western accents. The technical 'chops' of some of the musos involved are considerable and they can whip up some exciting stuff, but what a cultural anachronism...

The 'trucking' sub-genre was big in the early '70s and retains a cult following, not surprisingly among truckies. In this respect it has at least something to say to and about a contemporary working class group, as bullockies' songs did in another era. But to caricaturise such a sprawling and diverse field as country music as consisting of cowboys and Mack trucks is like the people, and there are plenty of 'em, who think folk is Cat Stevens and Melanie Safka. You would object to that, so stop doing the same to your country cousins. And stop transferring perceptions of Country & Western U.K.-style, where it has no indigenous base, to Australia where country music has an indigenous tradition going back seventy years.

The most ludicrous and offensive aspect of the whole thing is the assumption that there is Easy Money to be made in country. The fact is that the domestic market for all kinds of Australian music is so small that only a tiny minority of performers in any genre make any money at all. Many are more often unemployed than not. Some make a loss. Most barely struggle by. Like folk, country music is a marginalised genre in this society. The circuit is bigger than folk but the audiences are not so well-heeled. Performers talk of the physical demands of the enormous distances they must travel. The turnout is usually small, the money is usually small, and they continually battle the problems of lack of airplay and, indeed, a Mack truck full of media stereotypes. Does this perhaps sound, just slightly and in the very far distance, the ghost of a bell?

Could the awful truth be that the land of the Houyhnhnms turns out to be much the same as our own? My experience of the Houyhnhnms, having once journeyed into their heartland, was that there was little of the closed society about them, that strangers in different garb - musical and otherwise - were welcomed with great friendliness, and that they weren't particularly burdened with stereotypes. Take the two who had ventured to Tamworth from Tasmania's west coast. Their employer Electrolytic Zinc (I can see all the minds turning off immediately. Environmental rapists! Rednecks! Yobbos!) had paid all their travel and accommodation costs - Art & Working life eat your heart out... Good, gentle blokes and fine songwriters, not in the style I particularly related to, but accomplished nonetheless. And what did they rave about as we waited in the line? The Longford Folk Festival - starting up again, great stuff, 'great music, the old folk music' - and a set of Geoff Wooff's uilleann pipes he'd made for one of their mates. The country singers laugh at the folkies? Simply not so. Indeed the boot appears to be on the other foot, and a pretty pongy old boot it is too.

I pick up the latest Capital News, the country music monthly, and I find news of the Kapunda Folk Festival with results, and advance news of the 25th National Folk Festival to be held in Adelaide in 1991; on the same page John Williamson's intention to record the Eric Bogle composition 'Shelter'; on another page an extensive coverage of a Sitmar Cruise featuring Ted Egan, The Flying Emus, Warren Fahey and The Larrikins including Dave de Hugard; on the record reviews page the usual nod to folk type material, traditional or modern, this time an album by Nanci Griffith... Since when has an equivalent openness been shown on the other side?

Country music doesn't embody the 'correct' values, principles? Its current biggest star dedicated a recent recording to Ned Kelly and has, mainly in RSL and Leagues Clubs, socked it to the monarchy, Uncle Sam, Bjeke-Peterson, warmongers, woodchippers, Nashville clones and various other targets. I call this fairly brave to start with... Talk about 'standing straight and tall'... As far as Ben Hall and his mates go, there are stacks of bushranger songs in early Australian country music - following in the footsteps of the Carter Family dictum that 'The Music is Morally Pure' - push the line that country music is 'family music' and should stand for 'central' community values. Shades of Fred Nile? Maybe, maybe not, but certainly not devoid of principle.

Seems to me that the mudslinging I've heard over the years about artists 'selling out' is usually perpetrated by people who have employment security about those who haven't. On the one hand it is expected that folk performers display the standards of the professional entertainer whilst on the other they are expected either to reach these standards as amateurs, somehow achieving it all while holding together a job, family and mortgage, or to live on fresh air and peanuts. I believe that performers who attain a professional standard have the right to derive a living from their music alone. The simple reality is that the Australian folk circuit per se can't provide this. It isn't about megabucks in other areas. It's about survival. It isn't about 'selling out'. It's about reaching out and communicating with more people. Most of these people, unlike the majority in the folk clubs, will be working class. This was once thought to have something to do with the notion of the folk, I believe. Peter has been one of those who've been heard to groan mightily about 'timewasting' debate over what 'folk' is, the general attitude seeming to be that it can be just about anything you like provided that it happens at a folk club or folk festival. Yet when it comes to accusations of 'selling out', he seems to have a very clear idea of what 'folk' is. Maybe we would all be better off thinking about, not what folk is, but who the folk are, and that could be disturbing to confront. Strangely enough, in all the periodic resurfacings of the what folk is debate, I haven't once seen the dirty word class mentioned. Not even in the Committee of Inquiry into Folklife's report (remember it...?) Folklife: Our Living Heritage. The Committee resolved the relationship of country and folk music in a different way... It investigated the relationship of the country music apostasy to the true church and declared the apostates to be folk whether they like it or not, and therefore legitimate... But I doubt even this would have registered on the Closed Minds Brigade whose attention is devoted almost exclusively to their own doings and bugger the world outside. As Anita Loos observed of the Algonquin Club, 'I think it's wonderful to have so many internal resources that you never have to go outside yourself to see anything.'

The enemy is not a man or woman with acoustic guitar and a song. The enemy is identified by Eric Watson, old leftist, country music historian and immediate past president of the Tamworth Songwriters' Association, in his report to the 1989 AGM:

I believe the main...problem is that the music industry in Australia is not Australian, but is owned, operated and controlled by overseas interests. The major record companies and publishing companies have their head offices overseas, and the job of their Australian branches is to flog the overseas product. Australian radio, TV and, sadly, most of our performers feed off them, so that our whole musical establishment becomes a promotional device for American music. (We must) become more conscious that we are part of a hugely disadvantaged Australian minority, that the musical establishment is our opponent. There is a burglar in our house, and we have to fight tooth and nail to get him out. Unfortunately he has a lot of mates in the house. I...appeal to you to increase your awareness of these problems, and to strive to do something about them.

Anyway let's not get too tied up in having to think about things. Let's bugger off Bogle, bung Ted in the shed, and purge the ideological traitors. Start with card-carrying TSA members Small, Keam, Sayer, Broomhall, Davies and Illott and all the other cowgirls, cowboys and truckers. Then get onto the subversives in the heart of the establishment - the ones who have been overheard to admit enjoying and even, God preserve us, playing corrupt country music. Assassinate Aly Bain and make sure of the rest of the Boys. Shoot certain local Scots who have confessed kinky deviationist likings. Strangle the bluegrassers with their banjo strings. Build bonfires with their fiddles. Then when there's only us left to hear, we can bring out the old guitar, get the good old three chord pattern going, swung country rhythm with the right, and sing lots of choruses of 'Sweet Rose of Avondale'. Ah yes, there's nothing like a night of real folk music.

His heart must be as broad as his accent... Like all true poetic genius, Bogle transcends nationality, colour, creed, even time. His is the eternal voice that seems to materialize sometime in every century. We should be proud that this international man should have chosen Australia as his preferred home.

-John Minson, in Capital News, January 1987

Editor's note:

When his battered and bleeding remains had been scraped off the walls and reassembled in vaguely human form, Peter declined to reply. If there are any other would-be parodists lurking out there in the shadows, please don't let this deter you. The ancient Irish kings may have employed satirists to attack their enemies, but the effects were not usually fatal. Remember: 'Sticks and stones...'

Meanwhile, if anyone has anything constructive to add about Australia's Country music heritage, or any other tradition, for that matter, feel free to write.

Finally, a plea...Ethics prevent me from abridging or serialising letters, so it would be deeply appreciated if writers would confine their thoughts to not more than two pages at the very outside. (This does not necessarily apply to articles, which can, if necessary, be serialised.)

Paul O'Connor,
Chiltern,

The 'Not Yet Australian' article quite caught my attention (April Folkvine) - well the first paragraph précising Dr Judith Winternitz (Australian?) comments did.

The good doctor's reported query regarding '...whether the predominantly Anglo-Celtic culture of 100 years ago was still worth perpetuating...' at first stirred my 4th generation Australian Celtic blood, but when put into perspective with current government policy, it's probably not such a strange or out of place comment.

Government policy of the day (decade?) has no interest in preserving anything that isn't trendy or will win them another term in parliament, and besides, everything that the government and its grubby little bureaucrats get their hands on degenerates into a pale replica of its former self.

If we wish to perpetuate the Anglo-Celtic traditions of our forebears, then let's do it in the same tried and true way that has seen these traditions passed on to the present - in the traditional bardic fashion.

If the Anglo-Celtic culture of the present day is not part of Australia's ethnic mix (see ethnic: concerning nations or races; pertaining to the customs, dress, food etc. of a particular racial group; belonging to a particular racial group)...then the earth is flat, and I'm a Chinaman.

If we wish to keep our traditions alive, then let's do it without interference or direction from government (all of them), and if perchance we degenerate into an embattled ethnic minority - why, then we'll be swamped with government assistance.

Let's keep government out of culture (they've stuffed everything else.)

MORE NEWS FROM THE AUSTRALIAN FOLK TRUST

A letter from Gwenda Davey,
7/6/89

What's a Victorian Trustee doing living in Canberra? I hope the question hasn't been asked in an aggrieved manner too often. I was surprised as anyone else when I learned at the end of last year that my application to the National Library of Australia for one of the Harold White Fellowships had been successful. This was exciting news not only for me but for the folk world since my proposals to the National Library were to do with folk; to survey the folkloric holdings at the National Library and to carry out research for the Oxford Companion to Australian Folklore.

My Fellowship is the second one awarded to a folklorist since the National Library's scheme began in 1984. In that year Dr Sandra Dolby-Stahl from the Folklore Institute at Indiana University in the United States came to study ways in which Australian identity is expressed through our folklore.

I have been here since January, and am pleased to say that the research is going well, although I wish that there were more than 24 hours in each day...The Library is a treasure-house of information about Australia's folk traditions, both past and present, and I have found fascinating material about folk speech, songs, dance, instrumental music, traditional architecture, customs and pastimes, and many other aspects of our folklife. I've passed on to a few fellow folkies some of the treasures I've found here such as a poem written in 1861 about a Bachelors' Ball in Cooma. The poem sends up a number of the local identities who attended the ball, such as 'the Doctor's wife...of portly form, Looking majestic and quite warm'. It also mentions quite a number of the dances which were done and refers to

...pretty Miss Wood
Petite and so good
In crinoline ample now shows
That her nice little feet
Her figure complete
As in polka mazurka she goes.

Some indication of the amount of material in the Library is indicated by the fact that there are 450,000 photographs alone in the Pictorial Section, and the Oral History Collection contains over 30,000 items! There is no doubt that the National Library has played a leading role in helping to document our folkloric heritage, although there is much which still needs to be done. There are several major folklore collections in Oral History, most notably the John Meredith Collection. Other collections of songs, recitations, yarns, jokes, dance and instrumental music and children's games are those made by Manifold, O'Connor, Scott, Parkhill, Fahey, McJanet, Rummary, Marshall, Waters, Watkins, Hayes and others. The section also holds the master tapes for the Wattle Collection, which represented the first major commercial recordings of Australian folk music.

While I've been here in Canberra I haven't been of much direct use to Victorian folkies, although on a few occasions when I've been briefly in Melbourne I've been able to assist my fellow Victorian trustee Hugh McEwan with negotiations for the feasibility study for a Victorian Heritage and Folklife Centre, and other matters. I've also had a lot to do with the AFT National Office, and Pamela Rosenberg and I have had a number of meetings with National Library staff including the Director-General concerning the Library's proposal to the government to establish a National Folklife Centre at the Library.

There has still been no response from the Government to the Report of the Committee of Inquiry into Folklife in Australia, of which I was a member, even though we submitted the report in August 1987. I'm still involved in a lot of lobbying...

My Fellowship at the National Library ends early in July.
